I. INTRODUCTION

The Lif (Livelihood in Forestry) Project aims at expanding the planting to reach with USAID the millionth tree planted and introduce new economic opportunities through forestry that will further boost rural development. With administrative offices in Beirut, LRI technical experts manage a multi-year work program of activities throughout Lebanon in collaboration with grassroots organizations and local communities.

II. PURPOSE

LRI is seeking a freelance archeological researcher to study the archeological remains around the Nabaa Anjar spring and the antique quarries in the mountains of Anjar to put the related panel in Anjar Eco-Park within LiF project.

A. SCOPE OF WORK

LRI is establishing the first national forestry park with responsible tourism in Lebanon as a model for natural resource conservation, environmental public education and rural economic development. The Anjar Eco Park will also serve as a youth training center and an outdoor educational facility for children. LRI is setting a sustainable business model for rural areas that creates jobs and improves rural livelihoods while preserving and improving the natural and environmental conditions.

The Park is expected to hire around 6 local youth on a permanent basis. Income to the Park will be generated through diversified means including entrance tickets for activities such as: biking, hiking (option for hiring local guides), strawberry picking, nursery seedling sales, sales of food items developed at the processing facility and outdoor kitchen activities. In addition to this direct income, the Park will lead to indirect economic benefits to many citizens in Anjar by attracting more people of diversified groups. Anjar has always been a destination for historical tourism, and with the Eco-touristic park in proximity, it will become a destination for both historical and rural tourism. This is expected to increase substantially, especially through good marketing and good management, the number and diversity of visitors, which in turn will lead to more restaurants and shops across the town generating more income.
