

Project - Civic engagement and access to information: Towards more informed and more engaged youth

Terms of Reference

Senior Research Expert to identify main issues and weaknesses in the implementation of Access to Information Law in Lebanon

I. Reference Organization:

Lebanese Foundation for Permanent Civil Peace (LFPCP)

II. BACKGROUND:

Civic engagement and access to information Project is co-Implemented by The Lebanese Foundation for Permanent Civil Peace (LFPCP) and ARK, and funded by US Department of State.

Our Project aims to promote for the Youth engagement in the pursuit of the Access to Information Law (ATIL) in Lebanon.

The Lebanese Access to Information Law, Law No. 28 of 2017, is the first legal instrument in the country that obligates state administrations to publish financial and administrative data, and the first to allow its citizens to request information from the state.

Our Role is to encourage Youth to express and participate in achieving transparency and full access to public information and to be a part of pursuing the implementation of ATIL and ensuring its sustainability to enhance government transparency. We encourage Youth to use their right to know and acknowledge youth as a changing, renewing and driving power in society. The Right to information is the key to participating and contributing to decision making.

While youth face enormous challenges, particularly with regard to employment and livelihoods, they nevertheless represent the opportunity of today and tomorrow—as educators and innovators, entrepreneurs and investors, health professionals and scientists, politicians and peacemakers. This makes it doubly important to invest in them now— making it possible for future generations not only to survive but also thrive. We encourage Youth to use their right to know and acknowledge youth as a changing, renewing and driving power in society. The Right to information is the key to participating and contributing to decision making, and for youth to be part of the decision making they need to know who can make a decision, what a decision is and why it is made. Our goal, on the long run, is to Improve the capacities and enable the aspirations of youth on access and right to information so that they can contribute to and benefit from more stable, democratic, and prosperous communities.
